HER BEAUTIFUL EYES.
In it in color, or size,
The chosen which in those lovely eyes,
A blue, a child's, a woman's in one,
My heart is drunk up by the dew by the sun,
By the glance of her beautiful eyes.

Softly, kindly glancing up,
Unfolding his like a violet cup,
Looks towards her sweet and says,
Gazing into his depths, I know
The charm which sets my heart in a glow
Is the soul in her beautiful eye.
— Verse Epigram, in Appleton's Journal.

VANITY OF VANITIES.

In the register of guests on the Flamingo, overlooking the Mer de Glacé, at Olanhuon, a visitor had written in Latin and Greek the text, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." Another visitor added this postscript:—

Lord I have digressing 'tis to see,
Some one who would not let me see,
Airing the title of Great
Or Latin he has learned to speak;
The truth of what he speaks is clear,
His vanity is patent here.
Two crests are on his shield,
Thou art a noble and a noble knight,
The pin-collared steed, the emerald vale,
Tell in his hand a window tale,
The only impress of this scene,
Upon his face, his eyes, his hair,
Pretence him to leave the Mer de Glacé
The manifestation of an ass.

MOURNING IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC.

According to a recent authority, mourning in the South Pacific is carried on in a manner which is not only curious but also a widow will lay aside her bonnet and wear the hat of her late husband; sometimes a widow will go about in a loose gown, and her departed will over her own proper dress. Instead of a shawl, a mother will place on her back a pair of trousers, belonging to a wife who has just died. In these instances mourning is a national custom, and might be effected in this way, and although the appearance of a poorly dressed widow in one of the islands, and beside a lady over whose shoulders dangled the legs of her late husband's trousers, might at first have a funny effect, we should soon get used to it, and there would be the consolation of reflecting that Christmas would bring no odious bill for dress-makers, or lace, or Cashmere shawl, and that the widow in the most practical manner be tempered to the shorn lamb.

THE VORACITY OF INSECT LIFE.

Some interesting information relating to the voracity of insects was given, says the London Times, by C. O. Green, Member, to the House of Commons Committee of Insect Inquiry, on the protection of wild birds. In 1752 the caterpillars of the brown-tail moth were so numerous as to defoliate the trees of a very large part of the south of England. The alarm was so great that public prayers were offered in the churches, that the calamity might be averted. The poor were paid one shilling per bushel for collecting caterpillars, which, to be burnt under the inspection of the overseers of the parish; and four-score bushels were collected daily in some parishes. The brown-tail moth is a beautiful little white insect, about an inch in expanse of wings. Mr. Napier noticed that in 1853 it defoliated about 20 feet of hedge near Parkstone, Poole; and in 1854 the caterpillars of the same species destroyed their leaves two plum trees in his garden at Looe, one of which died. The caterpillar of the gamma moth is one of the most injurious to garden plants; it principally feeds at night, and concealing itself by day, is unperceived. The gamma moth overruns France about a century ago, and devoured a very large proportion of the crops. The caterpillar, the corn was not attacked. The gamma moth is sometimes extremely destructive to grass crops. Mr. Napier once saw millions of these on the Wrekin, and in the following summer the grass of that mountain was in a miserable state. The gamma moth is very destructive to alfalfa plantations. The buff tip, the cabbage root, and the small ermine are very destructive to the leaves of fruit trees and garden shrubs.

But on the other hand, the benefits derived from the labour of some insects should not be overlooked; some species feed only on noxious weeds, and others prey on still more noxious insects. One of the greatest friends of the agriculturist is the family of Ichneumonidae, which lay their eggs in the bodies of the caterpillars, in which they are hatched, thus destroying them; although the caterpillar, after being "ichneumonized," has still a voracious appetite. The caterpillars which feed on the cabbage eat twice their weight in a day; the larvae of some of the flies eat a much larger portion than this. The productive powers of insects vary very much; the hen lays only two eggs; others, such as the white cat, 40,000,000; laying them at the rate of 60 a minute. The queen of the hive bee is capable of laying 50,000 in a season. The majority of insects, however, lay but few eggs; in general, the larger the insect the fewer eggs it lays. Most insects have two generations in the year, some have 30, others have seven years from the time the egg is laid until their natural death in a perfect state. But probably not above five per cent. of the eggs become perfect insects.

Of his kind the daisy-long-legs is one of the most destructive, especially in France; it feeds on the roots of grass, and Mr. Napier in 1856 noticed it in the hills of the Marne devastated by it. The starling is a bird most useful in destroying these larvae, and those of the horse and cattle flies. The orthopteran insects, of which the locust, grasshopper, and cockroach are examples, are very destructive. The numerous species of grasshoppers lessen the amount of our grass crops. Locusts are seldom found in England now in sufficient numbers to do any damage, but they have done considerable damage here in former generations. Their greatest enemies are the starling and the rose-coloured parakeet, which follow them in flocks and despoilate them by hundreds. The locusts are immensely numerous, as regards species. In 1874 the cockroaches gathered in such numbers on the banks of the Severn, as to prevent the boats from passing the waterfalls. On another occasion, in Galway, they formed a black cloud that darkened the sky for the distance of a league, and destroyed the vegetation so completely that summer seemed turned into winter. They made a noise resembling the sawing of wood. The people, threatened with famine, were obliged to devour them. In 1854 they were alarmingly numerous in Switzerland. The female lays about 20 eggs; in six weeks they are hatched. They live from three to four years in the larva state. The first year they do not do a great amount of damage; but in the second year they attack the roots of all plants within their reach. They also eat the crops of corn, lucerne, strawberries, and various plants on which man depends for food. Our insectivorous birds are diligent in destroying the larvae of insects, but they will not do all that is required; hard labor is also needed. Mr. Napier is of opinion that the extensive diffusion of information on the habits and means of destroying our more noxious insects would be the means of saving millions of pounds worth of valuable food every year. He says that in the United States the importance of this subject is felt, and almost every State has a government entomologist, whose business it is to make inspections and reports of the ravages of insects, and show the remedy. In France, government returns were published, from which it appears that the damage done in Normandy by the cockroach alone amounted to 25,000,000 francs. A law was passed in France a few years since for the protection of birds. Not, however, that all birds are to be welcomed; the sparrow does more harm than good; by feeding so much on green crops, and the wood-pigeon does much mischief. But, on the whole, Mr. Napier is certain birds do a great deal more good than harm.

PROPHETIC DAYS.
Candlemas prognostications go, no three of dreams are said to do by contraries; fine weather on Candlemas Day being prophetic of a long succession of unreasonably cold days, and necessarily a failure of the crops; while foul weather on that day is a sure promise of a bright spring, with a summer to match.

"If Candlemas Day be dry and fair,
The ball of winter's to come; and fair,
If Candlemas Day be wet and foul,
The ball of winter's to come again."

Or, as a southern version puts it:
"If Candlemas Day be fair and bright,
Winter will have another fight;
But if it be dark with clouds and rain,
Winter is gone, and it's come again."

This idea is common throughout Europe. In Germany, they aver that the bader goes out for his hat on the morning of Candlemas, and if the ground be white with snow, takes his hat abroad; but should the sun make his eyes, he will not venture from his snug abiding-place, being of one mind with the shepherd, who would rather see a wolf on his fold than the sun upon Candlemas Day. So in Norfolk, the proverb goes that a shepherd would prefer seeing his wife on the hill, than than sun shining clear upon Candlemas Day; and they firmly believe in the wisdom of the rhyme:—

"On Candlemas Day, if the sun hangs a drop,
Then you are sure of a good crop."

"As far as the snow lies on Candlemas Day,
So far will the snow blow in April May."

In 1855, a correspondent of Notes and Queries announced that the Candlemas prognostication had been verified in Norfolk; if no snow fell, when a spell of rough winter was brought to an end by a fair and sunny Candlemas Day. "On the morning of Candlemas, about 10 o'clock, a thaw suddenly commenced, and on the evening of the fifth, frost again set in with increased intensity, which continued unintermittently to February 24th, the ice in the broads ranging from eight inches to a foot in thickness." But he had forgotten to take the change of style into account, so the striking verification of the ancient superstition was a verification at all. The Essexian observes, "I did observe, an odd custom. On Candlemas Day, in every house, a sheaf of oats was dressed in feminine attire, and laid, with a big club by its side, in a basket, called 'Brut's bed.' Before turning in for the night, the mistress and her maids retired in chorus:—

"Brut is come! Brut is come!
Short morning, an' long evening, the club was visible in the ashes on the hearth; it was held a sure-pledge of an abundant harvest and a prosperous year; if the club had not left its mark, it was an omen of coming bad times. Down Wiltshire way it is commonly believed that from whichever quarter the wind blows on Palm-Sunday, it will blow during the best part of the summer. In Hertfordshire they hold that—

"A good deal of rain upon Easter Day
Gives a good crop of grass, but little good hay."

If the sun shines clearly on Easter Day, good weather and good times are in store, and one may make sure of seeing the sun upon Whit-Sunday. The slightest showers falling upon Ascension Day is an omen dire, foretelling sickness among cattle, and great scarcity of food. A severe result follows a dry Hot-Thursday, and places are made for the expected almost up to Christmas. A fine Whit-Sunday means a plentiful harvest, but if any rain falls then, thunder and lightning, bringing blight and mildew with it, may be expected. Almost as ill-omened is a wet Midsummer Day, for although apples, pears, and plums will not be affected thereby, autumn bushes will prove barren, and the cornfields be smitten with disease. It was a proverb in Scotland that if the deer rose dry and lay down dry on Bullion's Day, there would be an early harvest. Considering the soldier-saint was the chosen patron of publicans and dispensers of good liquor, it seems odd that a shower falling upon St. Martin's Day should be supposed to indicate a dry and open of heaven's sluices. Martin, however, when he went in for war, was more moderate than his unconquered brother St. Andrew, commonly called St. Andrew, who, as every one knows, is content with nothing under forty days. — Chambers's Journal.
